The emphasis on asymmetry and natural forms reflects the stylistic trends of the time. Many pieces from this era demonstrate the heights of Sèvres' technical mastery, with exceptional painting and firing techniques.
- The Louis XVI era (1774-1792): A shift towards Neoclassicism is evident in the porcelain from this period. The designs become more restrained and geometric, with a focus on symmetry and classical motifs. The palette also shifts, with a preference for softer, more muted tones.
